Visual Language & Inspiration

Concept: Origami & Paper Structures

Where and How to Use it?
Inspired by the company logo, the visual language is extended to express values with origami forms. These forms are adopted from existing origami structures and aligned with the brand narrative.

They will find use in company collateral like: website, brochures and project cases. Judicious and little use will draw higher impact.

Examples:

Where and How to Use it?

The primary palette should be heavily used for the marketing collateral like investor's pitch, inforaphics, brochures and so on. Below is a specific use for each colour:

Redbracket logo colours
These colours should be used judiciously and rarely around the UI to keep the prominence of the logo. (Bracket it Button)

Subsidiary colours
These colours can form good layers on mouseovers to share information about the product. Or as backround/widget colours.

This basic guide will help in building the identity further. It is not set in stone. By sticking to it with minor variations (only if necessary), you'll see a consistent brand language.
